THEY ARE NOT FEATHER-BED SPORTSMEN! For eight months of the year, amid snow and players and irritate the public. Thus :sleet frost and thew, in " rain and strine " as the Yankees say, the football reporter has to turn out once or twice a week. Remember, he donot attend matches like the common or sixpenny spectator—as a metter of pleasure. He is there as a matter of duty. If gentle zephers fan the players so much the better, but if the rade north wind sweeps the plain, if outting east winds blow. he is there all the same. He cannot say, " Ugh. I don't think I'll go to the match to-day." If it" fine the prospect is tempting, but if the food-gates of beaven are opened and it remath without infermission he is there all the same. The football reporter must never trouble bimself shout such details as chills, colds, conglis, enturbs, consumption, and rheumatism. Of course, a dose of any well-known patent medicine will currently the ills, that the fi-sh of the football sor be is heir to. In a well-known song, entitled " Going to Market," the refrain commences with the word-" Naver mind the weather, love." This is what the stav-at-home editor whist re to the angelic football reporter. Only he does not whisper, he doss not employ such a term of endearment a-" love," and the reporter, be he even an hero, is frequently not angelle. It is quite possible for a man to be a here without being an angel and vice versa. In fact, I have known several instances of both cases myself. Mid show and ice, with numbed fingers and fors, the football reporter does not strike an imaginary or picture. sque attitude and erv. "Excalsior!" When journalistic duty's to be done, the lot of the football reporter is not a happy one.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES. · I have known what it is to stand behind a goalpost for two hours in order to write a more or less graphic and truthful account of a match. Under these circumstances one has to turn one's left hand into a desk and scribble away on a notebook. On this momorable occasion—it was before the rapid growth of professionalism -- Macaulay sant corversation with that brilliant custo ian, the wisdom of making some adequate provision for reporters.
